An electric power nail driver has been developed which includes a reciprocating plunger for forcing a nail into a substrate. The plunger is reciprocated by means of a reciprocating rod, driven by a motor. An example of such a nail-driving mechanism is disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication (KOKOKU) No. 61-14783 (U.S. Pat. No. 4,542,441). In this arrangement, the plunger is reciprocated by a cam mechanism driven by the motor. The nail-driving mechanism also includes a rest mechanism for returning the plunger to a rest position. The rest mechanism is adapted to hold the plunger at its rest position until the power to the motor is turned off. After the motor stops, it takes a certain time to return the plunger to its rest position, during which time the plunger is spaced from the nail. In conventional power nail-driving mechanisms, the rest mechanism is generally configured to hold the plunger at the rest position by means of a piston-cylinder mechanism. With this construction, the rest position cannot be exactly established at the rest position. In addition, when a nail is to be driven, the motor is turned on and the rest position is established, the motor may stop during operation. This is undesirable.It seems like we have a hero in the free software movement. When he heard that Valve had created the DOTA 2 client for Linux, it ignited a flicker of hope in a lot of Linux gamers. Valve, the makers of the popular Half-Life 82157476af
