June 19, 2014, 12:01 pm I think I agree with you on this issue, except Sonic looks like Sonic. Some people might not notice a difference, but I would have no problem telling someone who claimed that there was no difference in the looks of Sonic, that there is a big difference. June 19, 2014, 4:02 pm Well, I have a problem with your logic. The new movie looks like what the original Sonic looked like and not at all like the old and outdated version. The only thing they could have done better is get Sonic right. I would go so far as to say that the SEGA character designs should be changed entirely, or this movie would be rejected for poor design. June 19, 2014, 9:00 pm Sonic seems to be in the same boat as every other big name franchise. With multiple merchandising deals with toys, games, video games and other merchandise, Sonic has been known to put up a fight over rights and royalties. Here's a story on this matter. September 18, 2014, 1:24 am I think it is nice that he has new look. Although I did notice that it looked a bit cartoonish...but that could be my imagination because I'm no good with 3d objects or

3d objects with skin. But it was very nice looking to me though. I'm not saying I would really have anything against it if it was something that I thought it would look really good on. But in this case I felt it did not look very good and made me feel very dissapointed. It didn't really take the anim  series theme. But that could be my imagination and not SEGA's September 18, 2014, 1:44 am I know that this looks good, but Sonic is not the same character as when I watched the 1st or 2nd movie. The new design is appealing, and it just looks like a good movie. So I'll watch it and I'll love it. September 19, 2014, 9:11 am It's unfortunate that people will feel that way. I like the fact that it looks new, like a new piece of art. Sure the animation is a bit off compared to other 82157476af
